Lovable

I'll help you fix the issue where the webhook response from the third party is not being properly processed. Looking at the network logs, the issue appears to be that the response format from the webhook has changed.

The issue has been fixed by updating the response handling. Now the application checks for both "output" and "message" fields in the response, prioritizing "output" since that's what the current API returns. Additional console logs have been added to help with debugging if similar issues arise in the future.
